Hold $30 Bill of 1778 is Still Legal Tender

A bona fide $30 bill is held by Bernard L. Hoppe, of New Britain, Connecticut. The local banking houses pronounce it authentic, and Hoppe has refused many times its face value.

The note, dated September 26, 1778, and signed by "A. Lawrence, Secretary of the United States Treasury," is numbered 217,306. It is about one-fourth the size of a modern dollar bill. Bankers say it is still legal tender.

Origin of A-1

The familiar symbol, "A-1," was used originally only by insurance companies in rating the general condition of ships. It is now quite generally applied to anything in first-class condition, or "ship-shape."

An Evening With Our Boy Scouts

At the meeting of the Parent Teachers Association, held on Thursday evening at the McKinley School, a group of Boy Scouts representing practically all seven Westfield Troops, entertained the assembly with what was conceded to be a most dramatic demonstration of Boy Scouting.

An introductory address was given by Chas. E. Bingham, Scout Commissioner in the form of an explanatory talk covering the important subject "Boy Scouting, Character Builder," followed by the citation of a number of most compelling instances where Scout influences entirely counteracted those of bad associates.

At the completion of the talk, Mr. Bingham requested the audience to imagine they were out in the woods. He then looked down an imaginary trail and announced that the leaders were coming in search of an appropriate camp site. Three Scouts entered equipped with full camp equipment and proceeded to set up the pup tent and arrange the camp layout.

About this time one of the boys announced that evidently there was trouble down the trail, and sure enough, there soon entered two or more Scouts bearing an emergency case on an improvised stretcher, comprised of two saplings over which were buttoned a series of coats to form the support. Immediately those versed in the art of first aid, proceeded to bandage the shoulder and arm of the injured one, and an invitation was extended to any doctor in the audience to inspect the work. Due to the fact that it was a serious case, one scout was despatched through the woods at what is termed "Scout Speed," namely 50 paces at a run and 50 at a walk alternately, in search of a doctor, and in the meantime in order that no stone remained unturned, other Scouts proceeded to erect a signal tower from which one of their members signalled across the valley to a permanent camp equipped with a telephone, instructing them to telephone a doctor immediately. During this entire demonstration which occupied about three quarters of an hour there was not one moment during which the audience seemed to relax. It was as real and spell binding as a melodrama on Broadway.

After this demonstration, several of the boys took part in a very humorous game enjoyed by the Scouts, which required a decided stretch of the imagination. It consisted of the sale of a Ford car very much the worse for the wear. The car itself including engine and chassis were constructed of Scouts covered with blankets, and the owners proceeded to crank up the engine and demonstrate its special features and roadability to the prospective buyer. During this demonstration the audience were in a most hilarious mood and at the conclusion everyone pronounced the evening as a wonderful success, not only from an entertainment standpoint but as definite evidence of the real worth of the Boy Scout Movement.

Red Tape

A gun collector recently sought to buy some obsolete war material, for museum purposes. Some of it dated back to the Civil War, all of it is old and as little usable as witch charms. It was for sale. But it took days of time of officials to whom the government pays thousands of dollars a year, to negotiate the sale of three dollars' worth of stuff. A private company would have handled such an order between mails. This incident has a lesson for those who wish to learn.

Then they get X-Rayed and often that solves the mystery. It locates the cause of the trouble. The X-Ray is so helpful that we use it every day in our diagnosis. We make a picture of any part of the body for five dollars.
